Our Call:

There is no antidote!

Marco Tulio, 48, Costa Rica

Marco Tulio was spraying Paraquat on a banana plantation. His spray backpack leaked and the liquid dripped on his arm. After three hours, his arm felt as if it had been burnt and turned red on the inside. He stopped working and took a long shower. The next day, the foreman sent him back to the plantation with the same backpack. Three hours later, overtaken by nausea, abdominal pains, and irritations in the mouth, he was forced to stop once more. The village doctor recommended dressing the wound with toothpaste. When he showed up at the company health service four days later, his arm was covered with blisters. The wound did not heal and he was twice hospitalized for skin transplants. When he returned to work after nine months of sick leave, he was sent to spray Paraquat. He refused and was fired on the spot.
